INTRODUCTION

When you see a great tattoo, you want to stop and stare. The images in this book are a celebration of traditional and contemporary body art chosen to inspire you to produce your own unique designs.

Once top tattooists have completed their linework and imprinted a pattern on to your skin, that's when they really get creative with shading and color. Coloring is key to the perfect tattoo. That's where you come in. The outlines here provide you with the perfect opportunity to produce your own amazing tattoo artworks with colored pencils. Hours of fun are guaranteed and, who knows, you might want to turn what you come up with into a real tattoo.

Here are a few tips to help you get by:

- Think carefully about your color scheme and try to give the images either a harmonious or contrast-strong combination of colors. Remember to think about color tone – this can make the difference between a vivid, strong picture and a subtle, pale picture.
- Pencil color is not as intense as paint, so it really helps to add layers. When using darker shades, don't just apply one layer of color. Darker tones look better if you work over the area several times to produce a greater intensity of color. For example, most black areas are either warm or cool in hue. To achieve this, apply a layer of black, and then add another layer of deep brown or dark blue on top. If you want to make black even more intense, put blue over brown over black.
- When making blue or red, add layers of different blues and reds to increase the intensity. Sometimes the addition of purple can also give a blue or dark red more power in the composition. Other times, your top layer can be put on quite lightly, just to change the quality of the color a little.
- Try making the tonal marks of the pencils in different directions – cross-hatching, zigzagging or spiraling – to give your finished artwork an interesting texture.

Happy coloring!
